OPERATION MOSCOW

Bobby McLachlan
McLachlan
may get youth job

Bobby McLachlan has emerged as the coach most likely to lead the Australian youth squad to be named soon by Rudi Gutendorf.

McLachlan was coach of the Australian schoolboys squad that toured North America last year.

He has also coached Victorian clubs Sunshine City, Preston-Makedonia, Juventus, Brighton and Albion Rovers and as a player, he served APIA, Croatia (Vic), Box Hill and George Cross among others.

Gutendorf will name about 30 players in the national youth squad. They will come from among the best who competed in the Australian youth championships in Melbourne two weeks ago.

The squad will be prepared for the finals of the Coca-Cola world youth championships to be staged in Australia in 1981.

Roo born at 31

At 31, Marconi's Ivo Prakalo (above) may be embarking on a new career in the national team.

Prakalo played brilliantly as sweeper in NSW's 4-1 thrashing of Norwich City in Sydney last Sunday (see page 6) and is now set to graduate to the Socceroos team, as Tony Henderson who previously had been considered for the sweeper's position, proved himself to be a better stopper or defensive midfielder.

Prakalo, born on January 2, 1948, played 380 Yugoslav First Division matches for Velez Mostar before joining Marconi in 1976.

Margaritis hits out over sacking

• Poulakakis

John Margaritis is "surprised and disgusted" at his sacking by the committee of Heidelberg United.

Margaritis was replaced as coach last week because of an argument he had with committee member Spyros Poulakakis.

Former Heidelberg, South Melbourne, George Cross, Juventus (Vic) and Hakoah (NSW) coach Manny Poulakakis was appointed to replace Margaritis.

Heidelberg president Jim Mangopoulos announced: "It is unfortunate, but the committee felt it had no alternative but to dismiss Margaritis because he had insulted committee members in front of the players."

Mangopoulos said that in deciding on a replacement, the committee had considered also Cedo Cirkovic who resigned from Footscray recently.

Margaritis said, committee man Romboatis came into the dressing room during a team talk on tactics.

"Everyone knew that no-one except the team manager was allowed to attend such team talks," Margaritis said.

"I asked Romboatis politely to leave three times but each time he refused, so I said something to which he took exception. We had an argument and I insulted him. Some of the players backed me up. They told Romboatis that I was right and he should go.

"Later that night, the committee met, the matter was brought up and the numbers were there to have me dismissed.

"This is not something over which you sack a coach, especially not two days before an important cup game (Heidelberg lost 0-2 to Footscray on the Wednesday).

"I had promised the committee that we would finish in the top four."

had faith and confidence in the players. Sure, we had a few bad results and luck went against us a few times, but with 16 games to go, we were only three points behind the fourth-placed team.

"I am sorry for the players. To them, this is like being thrown into the ocean. I am also sorry for Jim Mangopoulos who I know was right behind me. I also thank Alex Papazoglou, Roy Gifopoulos and Tony Lavalou for their support."

He was with Heidelberg in 1977, switched to West Adelaide and returned to Heidelberg in 1978.

"Last year at this stage, the team had only six points but it finished very strongly," Margaritis said.

"If they sacked me because of bad results, they should sack Rale Rasic, Vic Fernandez, Alan Vest, Tom Forde, Joe Marston and Eddie Spearritt because their teams are either behind Heidelberg or only a few points ahead of us."

Semis in August

The semi-finals of the nation-wide Philips Cup will be played on August 11-12 and the final on September 30.

Canberra City and St George reached the semi-finals by winning on the weekend (see page 5).

In remaining quarter-finals today (Wednesday), Newcastle KB Utd meets Sydney City in Newcastle at 2.30 pm and Adelaide City clashes with Azzurri (SA) at Hindmarsh Stadium at 8 pm.

European Cup final on radio

SEA (Vic) and ZEA (NSW) will broadcast a live coverage of the European Cup final early tomorrow (Thursday).

The commentary, in English, will start at 4.45 am.

Nottingham Forest is favored to beat Swedish giants Malmo in the final, but Malmo has an impressive record (see page 3).

We're in the Olympics

By LAURIE SCHWAB

Australia will field its national A team in the Olympic Games qualifying tournament.

FIFA has ruled that the senior Socceroos meet the criteria of Olympic eligibility.

The Socceroos will play their first Olympic qualifying matches against Taiwan in Indonesia, probably in July.

National coach Rudi Gutendorf now aims to lead the Socceroos through to the final tournament of the Moscow Olympics next year.

The experience gained on the way will increase Australia's chances of qualifying for the 1982 World Cup finals.

Iran played in the 1976 Olympics in Montreal before qualifying for the 1978 World Cup and Israel competed in the 1963 Mexico Olympics before edging out Australia for a place in the 1970 World Cup finals.

Australian Soccer Federation president Sir Arthur George and secretary Brian le Fevre returned from FIFA headquarters in Zurich this week, with the all-clear on Australia's Olympic involvement.

They had gone to Zurich intent on getting a ruling on the eligibility of Australia's part-time players.

FIFA told them that the Socceroos were eligible to play and that other nations in the Asian region could also field their national teams in Olympic matches.

This means Australia will run into the Asian giants South Korea, North Korea, Israel and Iraq in the Olympic qualifying tournament as well as the World Cup qualifying series.

The last and only time Australia played Olympic soccer was in 1956 when the then Socceroos qualified as host country.

In its two matches, Australia beat Japan 2-0 and lost 2-4 to India.

Winners of the Olympic soccer tournaments: 1900 (in Paris): Union Park FC, representing Great Britain; 1904 (St Louis): Galt FC, representing Canada; 1908 (London): Great Britain; 1912 (Stockholm): Hungary; 1920 (Antwerp): Belgium; 1924 (Paris): Uruguay; 1928 (Amsterdam): Uruguay; 1932 (Los Angeles): no soccer tournament played; 1936 (Berlin): Italy; 1948 (London): Sweden; 1952 (Helsinki): Hungary; 1956 (Melbourne): USSR; 1960 (Rome): Yugoslavia; 1964 (Tokyo): Hungary; 1968 (Mexico): Hungary; 1972 (Munich): Poland; 1976 (Montreal): East Germany.

Jim Tansey (Vic)

Cumming, Tansey on trial

True to his word, national coach Rudi Gutendorf has included Victorians Tommy Cumming and Jim Tansey for the Socceroos' trial match against Queensland in Brisbane tonight (Wednesday).

Gutendorf said after watching Cumming and Tansey play for Victoria against Norwich City that he would give both of them a chance for Socceroo selection.

The rest of the squad is: Crook (South Australia).

KB UNITED: A STUDY IN MARKETING

Jazz bands and pop groups have performed at half time of Newcastle KB United's home games at the International Sports Centre.

Moscow Circus performers have appeared there, as have members of the Australian Commonwealth Games team.

There has been a karate exhibition, a merry-go-round for kids, an appearance by Ronald McDonald and the Newcastle basketball and Rugby Union teams.

Six children were selected from a fancy dress parade to have dinner with KB United players, seven of whom were engaged in coaching junior teams.

Bobby Charlton spent two weeks in the Newcastle area to promote soccer and coach juniors.

And in one of the most ambitious promotions, the KB United supporters' caravan appeared at the Toronto Trade Fair.

On every match day, the club runs a "Golden Goals" competition which earns the club up to $100 a time. Spectators buy sealed envelopes which contain a time for the first goal. If you have the right envelope, you win $100 for your 40 cent outlay.

All this and more has made KB

United by far the most popular sports organisation in Newcastle and soccer the most popular sport.

According to club president Paul Trisley, much of the credit must go to the club's promotions committee, made up of advertising executives, marketing men and journalists from radio, TV and newspapers, as well as club officials.

The result of their efforts to popularise the club and the code was seen in a spectator survey conducted by Marcon Research Associates at a match against Marconi in Newcastle on August 26, 1978.

One of the most significant results of the survey was that 62 per cent of the 15,641 crowd came in family groups.

KB United officials expressed justifiable pride in a briefing of local and interstate journalists in Newcastle last week. Inviting soccer writers from Brisbane, Melbourne, Sydney, Canberra, Adelaide, Wollongong and elsewhere was just another example of KB United's progressiveness in the area of public relations.

As a result of this progressiveness, Newcastle was the only club that drew more than 100,000 to home games last season. Its 18,000 crowd at the match against Sydney

Olympic this year stands as the PSL record attendance.

On the day of KB United's match against Norwich City last Thursday, my taxi driver remarked "We'll beat 'em." They key word is 'we.' Everyone identified with KB.

On the early morning news programme on NBN3, the sports commentator not only gave ample publicity to the match, but also went to great lengths to praise the club's media releases for the game.

"You can go and pick up a Rugby programme from the league offices, but KB United has its releases delivered to you by hand," he enthused.

KB's media briefing took place at the NBN station where commentator Dave Fordham presented also a video display about the club. TV coverage is behind the club 100 per cent.

The club has its own supporters shop in Hunter Street, diagonally opposite the sports store run by former Socceroo Ray Baartz, a KB United director. The supporters shop, sells club souvenirs and memberships and is also the club's headquarters.

KB's financial management is impeccable. Budgeting is done well in advance and outlays remain, above all, realistic.

Coach Alan Vest — described by the club as the finest coach in Australia — has done extremely well in moulding a team that held top spot for quite a few weeks at the start of the season, although he had only $10,000 to spend on recruiting.

His latest import is striker Kevin Keelan who was top scorer in the English Cheshire League. Vest hopes Keelan will convert the chances created by Ken Boden.

In 1978, KB's gross income was $257,321 and its expenditure $282,144. Allowing for non-recurring establishment expenses and the cost of initial promotions, the club considered the financial results as satisfactory.

It is KB's policy to develop as much as possible the youth of the area, but secretary Paul Trisley stressed that the club opposes the proposed banning of overseas imports, as it would lower the standard of soccer immediately.

Apart from the imports in its ranks KB fielded six Newcastle-born and developed players in the first match of the 1979 season.

The club is heavily committed to Tooths Breweries in return for sponsorship of $10,000 over three years. Banners of KB beer are displayed prominently, ads are broadcast over the public address system, the beer is featured in the club's programme, and players are made available to the company for promotional purposes.

There is a provision in the players' contracts obliging them to assist in the promotion of the club, particularly with regard to the sponsor's involvement.

rooms and poker machines, into a rectangular football field in the 1980-81. Floodlighting will also be provided.

Give me a year, says Gutendorf

Rudi Gutendorf will name his 18-man national squad after a final trial game against Queensland in Brisbane tonight (Wednesday).

The squad will have its first match against New Zealand in AUCKLAND ON June 13. There will be a return game in Australia, and the Socceroos will play also against Panitzer Belgrade in June.

Gutendorf said this week:

"Please do not judge us on our first results. The players will never have played together and they will need some months until they knit into a unit."

"Give me one year and I promise you, after 15 or 20 games, we will have a national team to be proud of."

"Initially, I am not looking as much as results as the change in mentality and style. I want the national team to play aggressively and offensively. Safety-first is not natural to the Australian personality."

My tip is that Gutendorf's 18 will include: Tony Henderson, Gary Byrne, Peter Sharpe, Mark Jankovic, Paul Degney (Marconi), Ian Souness, Steve O'Connor, John Stevenson, Joe Watson, (Sydney City), Greg Woodhouse (APIA), Ken Boden, Bill Summerscales (Newcastle KB United), John Coyne (Brisbane City), Tony Brennan (Brisbane Lions) and Stuart Baxter (South Melbourne).

The young Socceroos who play in the Coca-Cola world youth championships will remain together as the B squad and will be available for promotion to the A squad.

Shrewsbury, Fenerbahce win Cups

SHREWSBURY, England, English Third Division club Shrewsbury won the Welsh Football Association (F.A.) Cup by defeating Wrexham 1-0 in their second leg match. The first match was drawn 1-1.

Wrexham, however, will go into Europe next year because Shrewsbury, one of a handful of English clubs permitted to play in the Welsh competition, is ineligible.

In Istanbul, Fenerbahce won the Turkish Cup by beating Altay 2-0 in the second leg of the final.

Altay had won the first leg 2-1. Fenerbahce was second in the First Division, one point behind leaders Trabzonspor with two league matches to play.

Australians, English lack dribbling skills

The recent FA cup final, won 3-2 by Arsenal against Manchester United, was of special interest to me.

The manager of Manchester, Dave Sexton, and I played together at Brighton and still correspond while the Arsenal chief coach, Don Howe, was in charge of a coaching course I attended in England four years ago.

I felt the English Sexton must have experienced as his team pull themselves from the edge of disaster in the last two goals the last few minutes of the game, then fall over the cliff in the last second as Arsenal got the dramatic winner.

However, contrary to what a local commentator thought I did not think Manchester United was unlucky to lose the final.

Throughout the game Arsenal played with more poise and most important, more defensive sureness.

The Manchester defence was shaky throughout the game and the young goalie Gary Bailey was always suspect.

In the last minutes I noticed Manchester defenders ball-watching and allowing attackers to get on their blind side unmarked. This continued throughout the game.

The second goal headed in by Stapleton from a cross by Brady was the result of such ball-watching.

It is a fallacy in soccer that the team which wins the midfield, or generally dominates the play, will win the game.

More important than this is how both the teams are playing in the areas close to goal.

If one team is defending badly and at the same time consistently fails to convert goalscoring chances then no amount of midfield domination will win it its games.

In the FA cup final Arsenal defended extremely well until it relaxed in the latter stages.

Till then they had never allowed any Manchester player space to set himself for a composed shot or header at goal.

Manchester failed to do the same and Arsenal players had several clear-cut goalscoring chances three of which they took.

Another factor favouring Arsenal was its advantage in having four players who were often able to get past opponents in one-against-one situations.

These were Liam Brady, Brian Rix, Alan Sunderland and Frank Stapleton, all gifted dribblers and runners with the ball.

Manchester had only one on the very able to match them — Sammy McIlroy, the midfield man who scored the equalising goal following a typical jinking dribble.

All of the above-mentioned players, with the exception of Sunderland, are Irishmen.

Irish players are gifted runners with the ball and good dribblers, as are many Scottish players.

The English game is based very much on one-touch interpassing to day.

Few English players dribble the ball well.

The same applies to Australian players.

Such was the case in the Cup final where all of the Arsenal goals followed creative dribbling

BALL, NOT THE MAN SHOULD DO THE WORK

Norwich City, manager John Bond was quoted recently in the Press as saying Australian soccer was no better than when he last visited this country five years ago.

Bond's first visit to Australia was with Bournebank, and the Norwich tour gave me the chance to get re-equated with Bond.

I talked with him and his assistant Ken Brown after Norwich's game in Adelaide, and they told me my Australian soccer had not progressed.

Although I disagree with Bond's claim (and I'm sure he would have a different view if he saw some of our top PSL teams), there were several areas in which Norwich showed up weaknesses in Australian soccer.

The first was goalscoring. Bond argued that English professionals need only half a chance to score, while players in Australia waste many good scoring chances.

This was proved in Norwich's game against South Australia. The local team had three or four scoring chances, but finished goal-less.

Norwich on the other hand had only four or five goalscoring opportunities but finished with four goals.

In Melbourne Norwich again showed its superiority in the area of goalscoring.

After trailing 0-2 with 15 minutes to go, Norwich rattled in four goals in eight minutes. This shows the greatness of a team.

The game of soccer is about scoring goals, so Bond was right in saying Australia is a long way behind.

However, it's not a question of Australia lacking goalscorers. Many of our players, whether midfielders or forwards, haven't got the timing when the space is restricted near goal.

Modern football is about simplicity. The Dutch showed this. Simplicity in attacking is so important but in Australian soccer there are too many square passes near goal instead of direct passing into the danger area.

Norwich showed this with many fine crosses that produced goals. One second the ball may be on the flank and the next it's in the back of the net because the players do the simple thing.

This also comes back to accuracy of passing.

The Norwich players were excellent at sending in pin-point crosses.

I can compare some Australian full backs in terms of tackling and running with Norwich's Kevin Bond and Ian Davies but none of our full backs have the same ability with the ball at their feet.

Norwich works on an average of nine out of 10 crosses being sent into a position from where a goal can be scored. Australian players often waste nine out of 10.

Another area in which Norwich showed up Australia was speed of ball movement. Australian players can run as fast as the Norwich professionals but none move the ball as fast.

A player can run faster without the ball than with it and so Norwich's game is based around playing the ball into space for players to run into.

Australian players tend to play the ball to the feet of team mates who run with the ball before releasing it.

The ball must do the work, not the player. The Norwich professions are excellent at moving the ball around quickly.

Many Australian coaches believe a midfield general is a player who hangs on the ball for ages before finding an opening for a pass.

But take a look at Martin Peters, the Norwich midfield star. Sometimes you won't see him in the play because he is running into space, not running with the ball.

Peters has shown he is still a great player.

Overall, Bond was right in saying Australian soccer needs a lot to improve, but I'm sure he hasn't seen the best of our football.

The magic hat which is used for the Philips Cup draws has done it again. For three years, Brisbane City has been drawn at home for every cup match, which is unique in the soccer world.

I'm not resentful of Brisbane City, but the club has had unbelieveable luck; quite unbelievable.

This situation must puzzle everyone, including people who never attend soccer games. Once they find out about this incredible situation, they will decide to continue avoiding soccer.

"My area of work is in the development of the end product," said Emery. "We want to have so many good youth players coming through into senior soccer that club and representative teams will be made up mostly of these players."

"It may sound a bit harsh, but we will be catering for the better players. We will give the outstanding athletes the incentive to stay involved and go onto senior soccer."

"My job doesn't involve making soccer popular just to keep kids off the streets. There are local leagues to do that, and they do a fine job. My task is to ensure we don't lose the star 14, 15 and 16-year-olds."

Emery's recent appointment came at a time when the ASF was likely to impose a ban on the wholesale importation of players from overseas.

Obviously, if the ASF does impose the ban, Emery's pro-

Australia's new youth boss speaks his mind: Parents and coaches cause kids to quit

An Australian under 16 team will play against Asian nations in a tournament in Singapore in December.

"It used to be said: 'Join the Navy and see the world.' Now we can say: 'Play soccer and see the world,'" Australia's newly-appointed youth development officer Brian Emery said this week.

The Semelidis is a good example. Before he had established himself as a senior player with Heidelberg United, he had the experience of touring America with the Australian schoolboys team and then playing for New Zealand and South America with the national under 19 team.

Emery added that at present, the Northern NSW 16 team was in the U.S. and that another representative team from the north had toured West Germany.

Emery's appointment by the Australian Soccer Federation will not cause a massive re-organisation of junior soccer. In fact, Emery will have little to do with junior clubs or school teams.

His main task is to increase the number of young Australian-born and bred players coming into the senior ranks. This means he will deal mainly with youth soccer at a national level, and for the most part, the present set-up of junior soccer will remain untouched.

"We know problems exist," said Brian. "The main problem is that parents and coaches place too much strain on players at a young age. I don't like to know the people who put all the effort and time to support junior soccer but they often place too much emphasis on achievement."

Often parents expect their child to do something he or she couldn't do when the same age. Mothers want their children to perform better than another mother's son because of her own age.

Emery agreed with the call from all sections of Australian soccer for greater education of junior coaches.

But the coaching isn't a guarantee that the players are placed on a young kid," said Emery. "By the time a player reaches his late teens he's often had 10 years of regimentation and pressure. He's simply tired of it all and is lost to soccer."

It's at this stage that many players quit soccer once and for all. But Emery said the fall-out for this age group is high for any sport. The key in his work is to hold the good players who have a future in the game.

In recent years the national championships have been for under 12 to under 16 players, have been introduced to give players something to aim at," said Brian. "If a player knows he has a State representative team to aim for, he will continue."

And youth championships, which are for under 18 players, have been introduced to maintain incentive for players who enter the fall-out period (15-18 years).

The good players must be offered stepping stones to further their careers," said Emery. "It's a natural progression that players go from under 16 State teams to youth representative teams, and then onto the recently-formed national 'B' or national youth teams."

"There's been a suggestion that at under 12 level there should be no national championships," said Brian. "Instead, the best players in that age group could be assembled and funds allocated for a one-week training camp."

Top-class senior coaches aided by State junior coaches could work with the boys on the training camp. The week in camp would probably be more beneficial than playing in national championships."

"Even so, the incentive is still there for the boys to make the training squad."

Obviously, the big incentive for teenage players at present is the youth World Cup. The bi-annual championships are being played in Japan this year, but the next tournament will be in Melbourne in 1981.

Other Swedish internationals include midfielder player Staffan Tapper and defenders Ingemar Erlandsson - at 21, already considered one of Sweden's best-ever backs and freekick specialist Roy Andersson, not to be confused with the two other players also called Andersson in the Malmö team.

But the side's fortunes against Nottingham Forest may well revolve around two other players - midfielder Anders Ljungberg, nicknamed "Puskas" after the Hungarian star, and Tommy Hansson, whose header against Austria Wien, the only goal in the two-leg match, put Malmö into the European Cup final.

will be available for preparation in 1981."

As well, Australia will be playing on home soil, not in a strange land in front of hostile, un-nerving crowds.

On the 1981 youth World Cup, Emery said calculated planning was needed.

"From an economic viewpoint," he said, "the matches must be played where the crowds are. At this stage, it looks as though the games will be spread over several States."

"Last week Australia received official notification from FIFA that Australia had the championships. The details aren't yet worked out."

"Melbourne has nearly five times as many junior teams but produced only three representatives."

Emery is an experienced soccer administrator and will do well in his new post. Here is a list of his impressive credentials:

- former player and secretary of Dee Why soccer club
- former secretary and president of the Manly-Warringah Soccer Association
- former secretary and president of the NSW Amateur Soccer Association
- for 10 years manager of the NSW under 16 State team
- former president of the Australian Junior Soccer Council
- presently team administrator of the national 'A' and youth teams.

Fitting farewell for Simonsen, Vogts

Borussia Moenchengladbach's supporters cheered as Bertie Vogts held aloft the UEFA Cup, and for a while forgot they were witnessing the end of an era for the top West German club.

Vogts, Borussia's captain, Allan Simonsen and manager/coach Udo Lattek, all said goodbye to Moenchengladbach after the triumphant victory over Red Star in Dusseldorf, which clinched the UEFA Cup.

Vogts, the former West German captain and 1974 World Cup final veteran, is retiring.

Simonsen, the Danish super striker, is heading to Spain to make his fortune with Barcelona.

And Lattek is ending his reign as coach of Borussia.

Borussia, which had forced a 1-1 draw in the first leg of the final in Belgrade, won through a penalty by Allan Simonsen in the 18th minute.

Simonsen, supported throughout by the hard-running Ewald Lienen, ran himself to near-exhaustion.

Vogts, who returned to the circle last month after a double gust, fought with the spirit he showed in 96 appearances in the West German national team.

When the referee blew the final whistle, burly fullback Wilfried Hannes hoisted the diminutive Vogts high into the air before he collected the gleaming trophy and led his team on a lap of honour.

But Red Star came desperately close to spoil Gladbach's night by a last ditch comeback, which marked so many of their earlier round away games.

With eight minutes to go, Stavoljuk Muslih hit a snap shot from the edge of the box which smashed against the angle of the crossbar.

Red Star's late revivals had ousted powerful English clubs Arsenal and West Bromwich Albion earlier in the tournament.

LAST CHANCE FOR UNITED?

By KYLE PATTERSON

The curtain may come down on Heidelberg Utd's chances of gaining any success this season in Brisbane this Sunday.

Heidelberg, under new coach Manny Poulikakis, faces Brisbane Lions, and must come away with two points if to stay in the running for the top four.

A place in the top four is all Heidelberg has left to aim for. The championship is out of reach, and Footscray JUST knocked Utd out of the Philips Cup.

Despite Lions' lack of success, Heidelberg faces a hard task. The two Brisbane PSL clubs are hard to beat at home, and warmer weather in the north will unsettle the players after suffering wintry Melbourne weather.

The only comfort for Heidelberg's supporters is that the last time Poulikakis was coach of the club, he led Heidelberg, then called Fitzroy Alexander, to the State League championship.

That was in 1975. Poulikakis coached South Melbourne in 1977, and has also coached Juventus, Hakoah Sydney, George Cross, and the Victorian State team.

Poulikakis may be considering asking State goalkeeper Yolka Banovic, who is going through a bad patch, and replacing him with Jim Marcon.

Scottish international Jim Hermitson and Australian international Col Bennett give Lions strength in defence, and goalkeeper Nigel Lovewis is dependable.

However, the match is one Heidelberg has to win, and I expect the team to gain two points.

Marconi is hot after beating an Australian X1 2-1. Strikers Mark Jankovic and Peter Sharne, backed up by Eddie Krnecvic could be too much for Newcastle.

Manchester City may splash out a million pounds on two Scandinavian stars, Frank Adamsen and Feiring Lund, both on the books of Ajax of Amsterdam and both current Danish internationals.

City is also reported to be interested in Hans Baumester, midfield striker of F. C. Vienna and Swedish international Billy Olsen who plays for German First Division side Bielefeld. To pay for the foreign stars they would recoup their outlay by selling Peter Barnes, Asa Hartford, Gary Owen and Paul Fletcher.

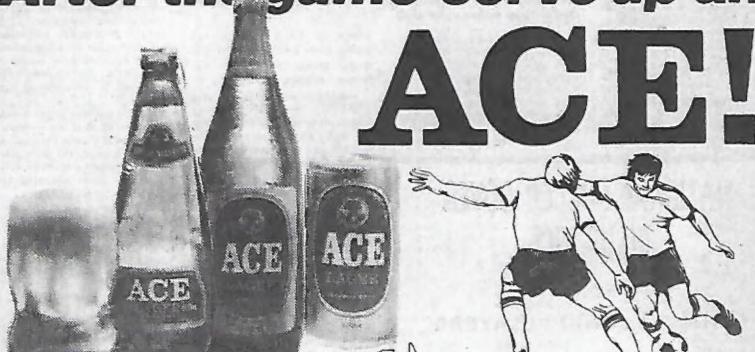

John Blackley, who cost Newcastle 100,000 pounds, 18 months ago from Hibernian has been given a free transfer. Relocated Birmingham is after Blackley.

Football tummies are likely to go all-electric in the next few weeks. At present the idea is being developed by Liverpool.

Cup-tie soccer is always capable of the unexpected and the unexpected happened at Canberra's Bruce Stadium last Sunday.

Footscray, the team which a month earlier had humbled Canberra 3-0 before its home fans in a League game, was taken apart in this Philips Cup quarter final which Canberra thoroughly deserved to win 4-1.

Footscray is a team brimming over with individual talent, just never put it together as a team. There was no urgency in its attacks.

But to the Canberra fans, this difference was England's 1973-74 player of the year and soccer MBE, Ian Callaghan, in his debut game for the blue and golds.

And despite his 37 years and massive 800 English First Division appearances, Callaghan proved he still has what it takes.

Wearing a No 7 jersey,

Callaghan played a roving role although primarily he — with Johnny Davies — proved magnificent linkmen for Canberra's forwards Terry Byrne and Paul Fielding.

Certainly his presence lifted each and every one of Canberra's players. It was a great team victory.

Even City's coach Vic Fernandez, before the game somewhat sceptical about Callaghan's potential, was lavish in his praise.

"He's beautiful", was the way Fernandez put it.

He certainly was inasmuch as he gave total effort and proved he can take — and give — hard knocks and hasn't lost the ability to always be in the right place at the right time.

It was this ability and his coolness on the ball, that made him a legend among England's knowledgeable Merseyside soccer fans.

Kept for action, Canberra launched its attacks in waves.

But Footscray, with its usual calmness in defence, looked capable of withstanding the pressure for as long as it took.

Ex-Socceroo striker Peter Ollerton — as predicted last week's "Soccer Action" — was drafted into defence and played well there.

But Footscray's main failure was the inability of its front men Picioane, Risticovski and Todorovic to shun off the attention of defence.

Throughout they were easily contained, although that's perhaps underestimating Canberra's defensive performance, for Canberra's backline had one of its finest hours.

Footscray was outgunned from the beginning.

In the 10th minute Paul Fielding's cross floated behind a hapless Footscray defence and Canberra's Terry Byrne headed the ball past keeper Steve Potter.

Three minutes later Canberra made it 2-0 from the penalty spot. Fittingly the man fouled, Byrne was the man who converted.

Few teams can come back from 2-0 half-time deficit.

Footscray got no exception — particularly as just five minutes after the turn-around Canberra's Jim Cant really sealed the game with a first-time shot from the edge of the penalty area.

It was this effort, which trickled just inches inside the post, that knocked out whatever fight remained in Footscray.

From then on it was all Canberra, with Ivan Grulic scoring the fourth goal in the 81st minute.

Just sixty seconds before, however, Footscray proved just how magnificently it can change defence into breakaway attack when in three moves, the ball came to Picioane and his close-range shot was somehow raked off the goal-line by Harry Williams with Hoszowski well beaten.

Williams, a 70th minute replacement for Mike Milovanovic, did the same thing for Canberra against Essendon. Credit those days before. It was only his second game back after two years' absence through injury and the former Socceroo looks fit and well.

Three minutes from time Zoran Ilioski got Footscray's consolation goal.

For Canberra it was the best win of the season. Certainly with Callaghan in — and Williams back — the team is now amuch stronger unit.

And with this midfield control that seems to exist, Canberra could finally get among the goals in League games. — PETER WINDSOR.

Brisbane City's dreams of winning the Philips Cup for the third successive year evaporated when St George won on penalties after extra time at Perry Park.

The final score was 1-1 and City made its exit in much the same fashion which brought it success in the past, but this time luck was not its ally.

It was the fifth time that City had gone through a penalty play-off, but this time it is St George that will play either Sydney City or Newcastle United in the semi-finals.

The man who will have felt the loss most is City goalkeeper Kim Wishart, who played the game of his life in keeping City alive during extra time.

St George scored its goal in the 11th minute. O'Connor made another swerving run but as he headed onto the byline he fell in a tackle and appeared to touch the ball, preventing it from going out, then rose and crossed the Hensman's cross.

City's other outstanding player, just failed to get a loose ball in the goalmouth when Kelso nodded down a Pimblett corner.

But whatever Morgan tried, Wishart stopped. Morgan did manage to beat Wishart once, but his header hit the post and from the rebound, Wishart somehow managed to recover and tip Grav's screamer wide.

In the last minute of normal time from a St George corner, Hensman hammered goalwards from the edge of the box, but Wishart was there again to block with his legs.

The first period of extra time passed without any major incident to either side, but in the second period St George finished the stronger and twice more often clinched the game.

Then came the penalty series and City felt the disappointment it had suffered in many teams in the past.

The penalties went this way: John O'Shea (scored), Ratcliffe (missed), Robert O'Shea (scored), Poter (scored), Della Puccia (missed), Wilkinson (scored), Risticovski (scored), Hensman (scored), O'Connor 9 (Morgan 7, 79th).

4-1: TRIUMPH FOR MARCONI!

By ALEX VESIC

NSW, with seven Marconi men in its ranks, proved too strong for the visitors from Norwich, and won the Soccer challenge match and the $4,000 that went with it.

It was a magnificent performance by NSW and one which will stay in the minds of more than 8,000 spectators, as possibly the finest ever performed by the Skyblues.

With seven Marconi men in the team it was more of a Norwich-Marconi game, as NSW played in the sky blue strip with the stripe across the chest.

With Woodhouse, Stevenson, O'Connor and Watson "guesting" on this occasion, NSW proved to be superior throughout the game to pave the way for one of the easiest and most memorable wins against such tough opposition from England.

As early as the 11th minute, the home side should have scored.

Following a corner kick, the ball was partly cleared by the Norwich defence. The ball fell nicely for Gary Byrne, who slammed the ball back towards Hansbury's net, but it came off a defender and straight to the feet of Mark Jankovic, some seven metres from goal and unattended. Jankovic hesitated long enough to allow the keeper to come out and smother a shot. Six minutes later, Jankovic was on the spot again. He raced into the box between two players and the unfortunate Bond brought him down to give NSW a penalty kick.

Niven's missed penalty saves Norwich

By BRUCE WADDELL

Several Queenslanders promoted their chances of national selection when the State produced a creditable performance against Norwich City in the fourth match of the club's Australian tour.

Queensland lost 1-0 but maintained the creditable form it has displayed as a State side since the inception of the Philips League.

In that time, Queensland's results have been achieved against the Australian Capital Territory (4-1), the Socceros (4-4), New South Wales (2-2), Dundee (0-1) and Wida Krakow (1-2).

Those figures certainly make a lie of Norwich manager John Bond's claim in Brisbane that Australian soccer had not improved since he was here six years ago with Bonnecarr.

Queensland could have shared the honours against Norwich had fullback Alan Niven not hit the post with a penalty in the last minute of the game after referee Des Miles judged Larry Gaffney to have been fouled just inside the box.

The local players who impressed were goalkeeper Nigel Lowndes, fullback Steve Perry, stopper Col Bennett, Gaffney, State League midfielder Phil Thompson and at times Barry Kelso.

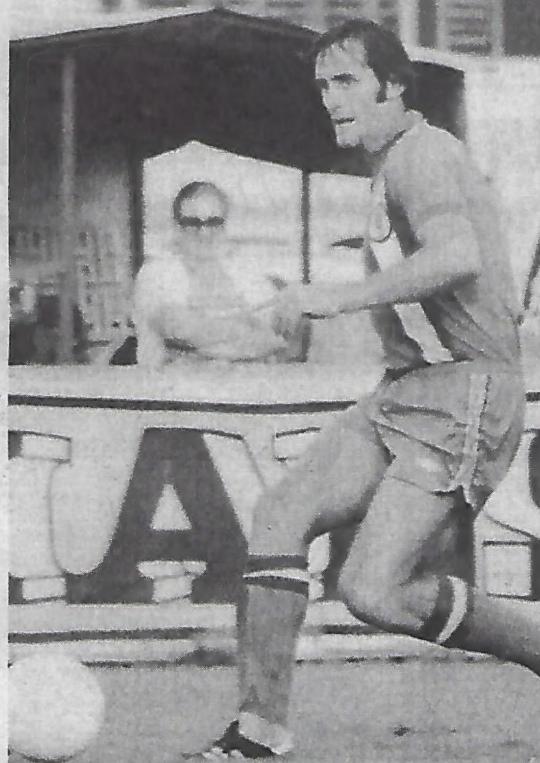

National squad member Tony Bennett missed the match because of bronchitis although Rudi Gutendorf did not come to Brisbane because he was to see the Queensland/Australia match on May 30 (tonight).

He was kept informed by his contacts here.

Niven came under notice after the game and was to be included in the Australian squad against Queensland. Bond claimed the Queensland side was the best he had encountered in tour and testimony to that fact was that he did not bring any of his substitutes during the match, which Norwich never really threatened to dominate or run away with.

Queensland opened the goal-mouth action in the first minute when Steve Dolan slipped a through ball to Kelso, who made a long run only to loft his shot into Roger Hansbury's arms.

Norwich moved into top gear and Keith Robson shot just wide and a long range drive from Graham Paddon as clutched by Lowndes.

In one of the rare occasions Col Bennett allowed just Fashanu and friend, the long ball striker to score, he did it in the 21st minute. Undone and dashed off his line to pounce before Kevin Reeves could make something of it.

Queensland won its first corner in the 15th minute with an industrious move by midfielder Phil Thompson.

Millman fired his shot off a Norwich defender.

In the 20th minute Queensland almost stung Norwich with a shock goal. A flowing move reached the half way line where Kelso gained possession. He moved only a few metres and from at least 45 metres out un-wasted no time in slammimg a great right-footer low and away from the goalkeeper into the right hand corner of the Norwich net.

Only two minutes later, Eddie Krnecic created a great scoring opportunity for Mark Jankovic. Brushing past a tackle by McGuire, Krnecic pushed the ball to Jankovic, who appeared unmarked and some 14 metres from goal, but he hesitated, allowing Hansbury to come out and smother the shot by the young New South Welshman.

Norwich almost equalised through Reeves a minute later. A cross by Bond was headed by Peters to an unmarked Reeves, who hooked a first time volley high over the bar from some five metres away. Three minutes later, Reeves had another opportunity following a long throw in from the left hand side. Krnecic and Peters went for the ball, but missed and it bounced awkwardly for Reeves who hooked it high over the bar with Woodhouse only metres away.

In the 55th minute, John Stevenson put NSW ahead. Tony Henderson found Peter Sharne on the left flank with a beautifully-measured through pass and the speedy winger found no match for speed in the Norwich full back Kevin Bond.

With the goal in sight, Sharne decided to cross the ball to Stevenson, who through-pass that landed at the feet of Paul Degney. With two players following him, Degney quickly back-heeled the ball to Mark Jankovic, who had the easiest of opportunities to score but alas, in attempting to control the pass by Degney, Jankovic pushed the ball too far and allowed Hansbury to make an easy save.

...And 12,000 fans had their chicken

-After I returned from a trip to the States people started asking me just what US sports promotion is like. The following article appeared in the United States press, written by a fellow journalist who I was staying with in Houston, Texas.

I feel it worthwhile reproducing as it gives an insight into promotion of basketball (a sport of similar status to soccer in the States) and thus an insight in the U.S. SPORTS PROMOTION IN GENERAL.

The Houston Rockets are the "local" basketball team who were playing their first home game of the season. I went along with Rod Humphries, a guy who is now the director of PR for the World Championship Tennis group owned by multi, multimillionaire, Lamar Hunt who also owns the Dallas Tornado soccer team and is the man mainly responsible for the success of the NASL. He financially supported it through its "rough" early years. He also owns the Kansas football team.

"We want chicken...we want chicken...we want chicken..."

More than 12,000 spectators in Houston's newest indoor stadium, The Summit, were stamping their feet and chanting for chicken. I guess a casual observer would have searched for the name "chicken" on the back of the shirts of the Houston Rockets or the New Jersey Nets basketball team.

But the 12,000 screaming fans were chanting for their own chicken — Ron's Crispy Fried Chicken to be exact.

You see, the Houston Rockets, like most sporting American teams, have promotional gimmicks to attract patronage and this season, Ron's Crispy Fried Chicken has promised every fan in the stadium a free chicken dinner if and when the team scores 135 points in a game. So, with the score in the mid 120's and time running out, the crowd wanted chicken.

Johnny Warren, the former Australian soccer captain, is visiting with me in Houston and was shaking his head in disbelief at the enthusiasm a chicken dinner had injected into an otherwise lifeless game.

From the outset it was going to be a one-sided game as the Rockets are one of the best teams in the country and the Nets one of the cellar dwellers.

But this was the first home game of the national basketball season and the Rockets' management was out to attract patrons for the season.

In fact, the primary reason we went in the first place was a deal cooked up between the Rockets and the Houston Oilers football team.

At the Astrodome on Sunday, it was announced that Oilers fans could obtain two tickets for the price of one to the basketball at the Summit by submitting their football ticket stub.

Two for the price of one, so who can resist?

After my kids picked up their free posters, we were ushered into our seats and handed a card which read: "Take this card to a food counter to receive your free bag of popcorn."

The game wasn't more than a minute old when it was announced "Ladeez and gentlemen, please check your ticket stubs. Section 110, row C seat number 4, you have won a freezer and 30 crates of Coca-Cola. Please come down to the official table to collect your prize!"

I mean, it just didn't stop. From the Coca Cola and the popcorn until the end of the game it was a constant stream of give-aways.

"Ladeez and gentlemen, please look under your seats and if you have the word Rockets printed there, come to the official table for your free Rocket T-shirt."

"Now, I am drawing a prize which is a trip for two to Las Vegas... all expenses paid. The winner is..."

"Ticket stub holder section 62, row D, seat 5, you have won a basketball backboard donated by Budweiser beer. Oh yes, and there is a free basketball!"

At half time it was the big one — an all-expenses paid trip for two to London.

tack, including Rick Barry and Moses Malone.

"Now it's 129... 131... we want chicken... we want chicken..."

The score is 133-87 with 45 seconds to play. The Summit is bedlam.

Big Moses Malone charges at the basket, takes the ball in his huge mitt and dunks it. It never even touched the sides. Twelve thousand fans had their chicken.

With a few seconds remaining, the Rockets stole the ball from the Nets and again headed for the basket.

The court announcer, an obvious wit, said in a low-keyed voice: "And that is for the potato salad..."

Johnny Warren just smiled and shook his head.

And there you have it. They do the same type of thing in American soccer.

SULTAN OF SOCCER, THAT'S JIMMY HILL

The small town of Moreton-in-Marsh, nestling in the picturesque countryside of Gloucestershire, is, perhaps, the last place you would expect to find a multi-million pound sports industry.

Yet, from a mansion standing in the middle of 52 acres of green fields, that is where Jimmy Hill runs the World Sports Academy.

Yes, the same Jimmy Hill of B.B.C.'s Match of the Day. But the owner of the most famous beard in football is far more than just a match commentator these days. He is also one of the richest and most powerful men in the game.

He is managing director of Coventry City, part owner of American side Detroit Express, and football advisor to Prince Faisal of Saudi Arabia.

Little wonder he is known the world over as the Sultan of Soccer.

His most lucrative seam is the Arabian contract with a 25 million pound stg. budget. This is currently subject to renegotiation. Looking after the World Sports Academy's interest in the Middle East at present is Jimmy's son, Duncan. He is responsible for the complete football set-up from schools' level to the international squad.

At first J. H. (as he likes to be known) found himself flying to Saudi every other week, but with his other interests escalating, he simply hadn't the time.

His slice of the American market began way back in 1962 when he became advisor to Montreal Concordia. Now he is one of the most powerful financial backers of the Detroit side.

And even though he lost out in a 900,000 pound bid to take Trevor Francis to Coventry, he has the consolation of knowing he has the same player on a three-year contract in America.

Yes, Jimmy Hill just can't lose. Even as managing director of Coventry City his team's touch rarely lets him down.

As a former manager of the side, he rejoined the Board in 1975. City were almost bankrupt and J. H. set about putting the finances right.

John Craven, Willie Carr, Dennis Mortimer, Brian Alderson, Les Cartwright, David Cross and Colin Stein were all transferred. Jim Holton, Terry Yorath and Ian Wallace were bought for bargain prices.

Though he spends most of his time between Detroit and the B.B.C. in London, Jimmy is at Highfield Road almost every Tuesday night for the Board meeting — and the club's reserve matches have been rearranged for that night so he can keep his eye on the progress of the youngsters at the same time.

MORE THAN 3000 YEARS OF FOOTBALL . . .

The actual contemporary history of football covers a good 100 years. It all began in the year 1863 in England when rugby football and association football branched off in their different courses and the oldest football association in the world was founded, namely The Football Association, England.

Both forms of football sprung up from a common root and both have a long and intricately branched ancestral tree.

Their early history reveals at least half a dozen different games, varying in some respects to different degrees and to which the historical development of football is related and has actually been traced back.

Whether this can be justified in scientific terms is debatable. The fact, however, remains that playing ball with the feet has been going on for thousands of years and there is absolutely no reason to believe that it is an aberration of the more 'natural' form of ball play with the hands.

On the centre is seen from the absolute necessity to employ the legs and feet in such a tough bodily tussle for the ball, often without any laws for protection. It was evidently recognised right at the onset that the art of controlling the ball with the feet was extremely difficult and therefore required special technique and talent.

The very earliest form of the game for which there is scientific evidence represents the exercise of precisely this skillful technique: it dates back to the 3rd and 2nd centuries B.C. in China.

A military manual dating from the period of the Han Dynasty includes as one of the physical education exercises in use at that time the 'Tsu-Chu'.

This consisted to kicking a leather ball filled with feathers and hair through an opening, measuring only 30 cm - 40 cm, in a small net fixed onto long bamboo canes, a feat which obviously demanded great skill and excellent technique.

There was also another version of this whereby the player was not just permitted to aim at his target unimpeded, but had to use his feet, chest, back and shoulders whilst trying to withstand the attacks of his antagonists. Use of the hands was not permitted.

Pagan customs, especially fertility rites, played a major role . . .

The ball artistry of today's top players is therefore not quite so new as some people may assume.

Originating in the Far East was yet another form, the Japanese Kemari, which was only heard of about 500 to 699 years later and which is still played today.

This is a type of circular football game far less spectacular, but for that reason a more dignified and ceremonious experience, requiring certain skills but not competitive in the way that the Chinese game was, nor is there the slightest sign of struggle for possession of the ball.

The players had to pass the ball to each other, in a relatively small space, trying not to let it touch the ground.

The Greek game 'Episkyros', relatively little of which has been handed down was much livelier, and so was the Roman game called 'Harpastum'.

The Romans played with a small ball, two teams contending on a rectangular field marked by boundary lines and a centre-line.

The object was to get the ball over the opponent's boundary lines. Passes were made and trickery was the order of the day. Each team member already had his particular tactical assignments and the spectators took a voracious interest in the proceedings and in the score.

The role of the feet in this game was so small as scarcely to be of consequence. This game remained popular for 700 to 800 years but although the Romans took it to England with them it is doubtful whether it can be considered as a forerunner of contemporary football.

This also applies to Hurling, a popular game with the Celtic population which is played to this very day in Cornwall and Ireland. It is possible that influences were asserted but it is certain that the decisive development took place in Ireland which we are now familiar took place in England and Scotland.

The game which flourished in the British Isles from the 8th to the 15th Centuries, in a considerable variety of local and regional versions — which was subsequently smoothed down and smartened up into present-day football, and Rugby football in the other direction — was substantially different from all the previously known forms.

It was more disorganized, more violent, more spontaneous and was usually played by an indefinite number of players.

Frequently it took the form of a heated contest between whole village communities or townships — through streets, village squares, across fields, hedges, fences and streams. Kicking was allowed, as was in fact almost everything else, but there were certainly games where kicking was out of the question due to the size and weight of the ball being used.

Kicking was employed rather to foul an opponent.

Incidentally it was not until nine years after the football rules had been established for the first time in 1863 that the size and weight of the ball were finally standardized.

Up to that time, agreement on this point had usually been reached by the parties concerned when they were arranging the match, for instance for a game between London and Sheffield in 1866.

This was the first match incidentally where the duration of the game was prearranged for one and a half hours.

Up to that time, agreement on

Shrovetide football, as it was called belonged in the 'mob football' category where the number of players was unlimited and the rules were not very precise (according to an ancient hand-book from Workington in England, all means were permitted to get the ball to its target except murder and manslaughter).

Shrovetide football is still played nowadays on Shrove Tuesday in some traditional English towns, e.g. Ashbourne, Derbyshire. Needless to say it is not so riotous as it used to be, nor are such extensive casualties suffered as was probably the case centuries ago.

This game is reputedly Anglo-Saxon and there are many legends concerning its first appearance.

In Kingston-on-Thames and in Chester for example the story goes that it was played for the very first time with the severed head of a vanguard Danish prince.

In Derby it is said to have originated far earlier during the victory celebrations after a battle against the Romans in the 3rd Century.

In spite of the legends of Kingston and Chester, there are certain facts which appear to contradict the Anglo-Saxon theory, namely that there is no evidence of it having been played at this time in the Saxon areas on the Continent and neither is it mentioned in early Anglo-Saxon literature.

Prior to the Norman conquest the only trace found of 'mob' ball games was in a Celtic source.

One other possible theory regarding the origin is that when the aforementioned 'mob football' was being played in the British Isles in the early centuries, a very similar game was thriving in France, particularly in Normandy and Brittany, so it is quite feasible that the Normans brought this form of the game into England at that period.

All these theories produce a picture quite bewildering in its complexity — far more complex than the simple rules which governed this form of the game, if we dare even to call them rules.

football, even though it was so often disapproved of by the authorities.

The repeated intervention needed by the authorities and high offices of the land shows how powerless they were to restrict it, in spite of their condemnation and the threats of severe punishment.

Playing football in London in 1314 meant going to jail . . .

As long ago as 1314 the Lord Mayor of London saw fit to issue a proclamation forbidding football within the city due to the rumpus it usually caused and infringement of this law meant imprisonment.

King Edward III edict extremely harsh measures in the year 1331 to suppress football which was regarded as a public nuisance and at the same period similar prohibitions were proclaimed in France.

During the 100 Years war between England and France from 1338 to 1453 the counts also used to prohibit football to the football, albeit for different reasons.

Edward III, Richard II, Henry IV and Henry V made football punishable by law because the well-loved recreation prevented their subjects from the exercise of more useful military accomplishments, particularly archery which played an important and valuable role in the English army at that period.

All the Scottish kings of the 15th Century also deemed it necessary to edict censures and prohibitions against football.

Particularly famous amongst these was the decree proclaimed by parliament convened by James I in 1424: "that no man play at the Fute-ball."

None of this had much effect. The popularity of the game amongst the people and their obvious delight in the rough and tumble for the ball went far too deep to be uprooted.

The passion for football was particularly exuberant in Elizabethan times.

Calcio from Venice and Florence was a major influence . . .

An influence which most likely played a part in helping mounting native popularity of the game came from Renaissance Italy, especially from Florence, but also from Venice and their cities, which had produced their own brand of football called 'Calcio'.

It was certainly more organized than the English equivalent and was played at important gala events held on certain holidays in Florence by teams dressed in colored liveries.

A splendid spectacle indeed.

In England the game was still as rough and ungracious and lacking in refinement as ever, but it old at times find its way into the upper classes who commanded it for other reasons when he saw the simple joy of the players romping after the ball.

This was Richard Mulcaster, the great pedagogue, Head of the famous schools Merchant Taylors' and St. Paul's, who pointed out that the game had positive educational worth and promoted health and strength and all that was needed was to refine it a little and give it better manners.

His notion was that the game would benefit most if the number of

From its earliest origins in the Chinese military of the third century BC, football has developed through various stages, including total prohibition and even use as a fertility rite. Today, as the world's most popular sport, football celebrates the 75th anniversary of its internationalism. FIFA, the sport's ruling body, was formed three-quarters of a century ago, in May, 1904, by France, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and West Germany.

used the head prince

"Circle Football," which was played in Farther The illustration appeared in a travel report in 1602.

Nonetheless none of these circumstances could eradicate football, in spite of the relentless pressures exerted upon it.

Take Derby for instance, where the authorities made continual attempts between 1731 and 1841 to ban football from the streets, in the end they had to resort to the riot laws to achieve any effect at all.

All told there was scarcely any progress at all in the development of football for hundreds of years.

But although the game was constantly forbidden for 500 years it was never completely suppressed, but as a consequence remained essentially rough, violent and disorganized.

A change did not come about until the beginning of the 19th century when school football became the custom, particularly in the famous public schools.

This was the turning point. In this new environment it was possible to make innovations and refinements to the game.

The rules were still relatively free and easy as there was still to standard, organised form of the game.

Each school in fact developed its own adaptation and these varied considerably at times.

The traditional aspects of the game remained but innovations depended for the most part on the playing ground available.

If use had to be made of a paved school playground, surrounded by a brick wall, then there was just enough space for the old hurly-burly mob football.

Circumstances such as these made schools like Charterhouse, Westminster, Eton and Harrow give birth to the type of game in which more depended on the player's dribbling virtuosity than on the robust energy required in a scrum.

On the other hand schools such as Cheltenham and Rugby were more inclined towards the more rugged game in which the ball could be touched or even carried.

From then on football on Sundays was taboo, and remained so for a good 30 years, until it was permitted once again, at first unofficially and ultimately with the formal consent of the Football Association, albeit on a rather small scale.

All these early styles were given a great boost when it was recognized in educational circles that football was not merely an excuse to indulge in a childish romp, but could actually be beneficial educationally.

What is more it was realized that it also constituted a useful diversion from less desirable occupations, such as heavy drinking and gambling, but finally a new attitude permeated the game which led up to the "Games Cult" at public schools.

This happened when it was noticed how well the team game served to encourage such fine qualities as loyalty, selflessness, cooperation, subordination and deference to the team spirit.

Games became an integral part of the school curriculum and participation in football became compulsory.

Dr Thomas Arnold, the Head of Rugby school made advances in this direction, for in 1846 in Rugby the first truly standard rules for an organized game were laid down.

Kicking legs below the knee was quite in order . . .

It was in any event quite rough enough, for example, kicking the opponent's legs below the knee was allowed, with the reserve that he should not be held still whilst his shins were being worked on.

Handling the ball was also allowed and ever since the memorable occasion in 1823 when William Webb had the amazement of his own team and his opponents, made a run with the ball tucked under his arm, carrying the ball has been permitted.

Many schools followed suit and adopted the rules laid down in Rugby, others rejected this form of football, e.g. Eton, Harrow and Winchester where preference was given to kicking the ball, and carrying it was forbidden.

Charterhouse and Westminster were also touching the ball. They did not isolate their style, however, as some schools did, but formed a nucleus from which this style of game began to spread.

Finally, in 1863, developments were reaching a climax. At Cambridge University where in 1848 attempts had already been made by former pupils from the various schools to find a common denominator for all the different adaptations of the game, a fresh initiative to establish some uniform standards and some rules which would be acceptable to everyone was started.

It was at this point that the majority spoke out against such rough customs as tripping, shin-kicking and so on, as it happened the majority also expressed disapproval of carrying the ball.

It was this that caused the Rugby group to withdraw; they would probably have agreed to refrain from shin-kicking, which was in fact later banned in the Rugby regulations, but they were reluctant to relinquish carrying the ball.

This Cambridge action was an endeavour to sort out the utter confusion surrounding the rules. The decisive initiative, however, was taken due to a series of meetings which were organised at the end of the same year (1863) in London.

Football Association born in a meeting at a tavern . . .

Eleven London clubs and schools which were set on clarifying the muddle by establishing a set of fundamental rules to govern the matches played among themselves, which could be acceptable to all parties, sent their representatives along to the Freemason's Tavern on 26 October 1863, the birthday of the football association.

This international football community grew steadily, although it sometimes met with obstacles and setbacks.

In 1912, 21 National Associations were affiliated to the "Fédération Internationale de Football Association", in Paris, and 38 in 1930 — the year of the first World Cup. In 1938, 51 countries in 1950, after the interval caused by the Second World War, when the third World Cup was staged, the number had reached 73.

The eternal dispute concerning shin-kicking, tripping and carrying the ball were discussed thoroughly at this meeting and at consecutive meetings until eventually at the final meeting on 8 December the die-hard exponents of the Rugby style took their final leave; they were in the minority anyway.

They wanted no part in a game which forbade tripping, shin-kicking and carrying the ball.

A stage had been reached where ideas were no longer compatible.

The 8 December 1863 was the date when Football and Rugby finally split.

Their separation became totally irreconcilable six years hence when a provision was included in the football rules forbidding any handling of the ball (not only carrying it).

Only eight years after its foundation, The Football Association already had 50 member clubs.

The first football competition in the world was started in the same year: the English cup, which preceded the league championship by 17 years.

International matches were already being staged in Germany before football had hardly been heard of in Europe. The first was between England and Scotland in 1872.

This sudden boom of organised football accompanied by amazingly vast crowds of spectators brought with it certain problems which other countries were confronted with much later: professionalism was one of them.

The first sign in this direction was in 1879 when Darwen, a small Lancashire club, managed to draw twice in the Cup competition against the supposedly invincible Old Etonians, before these famous London amateurs finally scraped through to win at the third attempt.

Handling the ball was also allowed and ever since the memorable occasion in 1823 when William Webb had the amazement of his own team and his opponents, made a run with the ball tucked under his arm, carrying the ball has been permitted.

Many schools followed suit and adopted the rules laid down in Rugby, others rejected this form of football, e.g. Eton, Harrow and Winchester where preference was given to kicking the ball, and carrying it was forbidden.

Charterhouse and Westminster were also touching the ball.

They did not isolate their style, however, as some schools did, but formed a nucleus from which this style of game began to spread.

Finally, in 1863, developments were reaching a climax. At Cambridge University where in 1848 attempts had already been made by former pupils from the various schools to find a common denominator for all the different adaptations of the game, a fresh initiative to establish some uniform standards and some rules which would be acceptable to everyone was started.

It was this that caused the Rugby group to withdraw; they would probably have agreed to refrain from shin-kicking, which was in fact later banned in the Rugby regulations, but they were reluctant to relinquish carrying the ball.

This Cambridge action was an endeavour to sort out the utter confusion surrounding the rules. The decisive initiative, however, was taken due to a series of meetings which were organised at the end of the same year (1863) in London.

It was the oldest Scottish club team, Queen's Park, which had met England.

The spread of football outside of Great Britain, mainly due to the British influence abroad was slow at first, but it soon gathered momentum and spread rapidly to all parts of the world.

The next countries to form football associations after the Netherlands and Denmark (1889) were New Zealand (1891), Argentina (1893), Chile (1895), Switzerland and Belgium (1895), Germany and Uruguay (both in 1900), Hungary (1901) and Finland (1907).

When FIFA was founded in Paris in May 1904 it had seven founder members: France, Belgium, Denmark, the Netherlands, Spain (represented by the Madrid FC), Sweden and Switzerland. On the same day the German football Federation cabled its intention to join.

This international football community grew steadily, although it sometimes met with obstacles and setbacks.

In 1912, 21 National Associations were affiliated to the "Fédération Internationale de Football Association", in Paris, and 38 in 1930 — the year of the first World Cup.

Only eight years after its foundation, The Football Association already had 50 member clubs.

The first football competition in the same year: the English cup, which preceded the league championship by 17 years.

International matches were already being staged in Germany before football had hardly been heard of in Europe. The first was between England and Scotland in 1872.

This sudden boom of organised football accompanied by amazingly vast crowds of spectators brought with it certain problems which other countries were confronted with much later: professionalism was one of them.

The first sign in this direction was in 1879 when Darwen, a small Lancashire club, managed to draw twice in the Cup competition against the supposedly invincible Old Etonians, before these famous London amateurs finally scraped through to win at the third attempt.

VICTORIAN STATE LEAGUE

— with Kyle Patterson

FRANKSTON 1
SLAVIA 0

Peter Clarke

Scorers: B. Young 79th
Ground: Canterbury Park.
FRANKSTON CITY: Patterson — V. Ward, Ward, Ward, Ward, Clusky, Patterson (injured) (Campbell) — G. Bannon, Peters, Webster — B. Young, Mitten, Swinscoe.
PRAHRAN SLAVIA: McPherson — Thompson (injured) (Cook), Westley, Larkins, Ward, Ward, Ward, Ward, Kinner, Aldridge, Griffiths, Williams.

Prashan Slavia has stepped up its British recruiting campaign in an effort to bolster the team after the loss of John Vandom and Jamie Paton.

Two players arrived last week, and reports indicate a further seven more players will join Slavia from the U.K. now that the club has the financial resources to back the recruiting drive.

The new players are striker Dave Griffiths and left full back John Cullen, both from the Liverpool area in England.

Griffiths made his debut against Frankston after arriving on the Thursday before the match. Cullen played in the reserves on Saturday.

Two weeks earlier, defender Steve Lawson was recruited and slotted into Yawdon's position.

However, Frankston maintained its 100% record in the championship with a 1-0 victory over Slavia.

Winger Bruce Young scored the winning goal in the 78th minute when he received a clearance from the corner and hit the ball through a ruck of players from 20 yards.

Slavia goalkeeper Alex McPherson was unsighted and unable to prevent the shot hitting the net.

The goal was the 10th Frankston's fourth corner on the trot, and was the reward of sustained pressure from Frankston.

However, the first half was an even battle with both teams repecting opponent's space, and defences coming out on top.

However, Slavia points to the moment when Peter Peters saved Frankston from some bad defensive work which prevented a goal.

At the other end, McPherson was earning his keep with a solid display.

Marketers, coaches and existing soccer, at present, had an un-spectacular game, but contributed in midfield.

Young was switched when stopper Bob Adams was injured. Adams made a comeback in the reserves last week but Young's return will keep him out of the team for the foreseeable future.

Two full backs — Frankston's Alan Parrott and Frank Thompson of SLAVIA — had to leave the ground with injuries.

Replacement Paul Cook, who joined Slavia from the U.K. in February, went into midfield and Jim Train went to full back.

The best players for Slavia were winger Jim Williams, sweeper Steve Lawson and goalkeeper Alex McPherson.

Frankston's best were Danny McClusky, Ged Bannon and Bruce Young.

SUNSHINE 0
CROATIA 2

Scorers: Gilder 3rd, Cumming 50th.

Ground: Anderson Road.
SUNSHINE CITY: Clerks — Disney, Ivens, Ellis, Ward, Esposito — M. Nelson — Pelesay (Gilmour), Laing, D. Nelson.

ESSENDON CROATIA: Slaby B. Smart (Andrews), Kokoska, Short, Cullen, Ward, Adams — Cumming, Murphy, Gilder.

Essendon Croatia has dropped plans to bring two top players from Britain, but will keep the players under consideration for the 1980 season.

The team has a full back and a midfielder — may come to Australia as bone fide immigrants to Essendon Croatia, can escape the clamp down on professionals.

Croatia shelled the day to bring out the players when they decided they would stay in Australia only until November. The costs were at such a level that Croatia regarded it an inevitable prospect for a short time.

Grujicic and Cagalj for Croatia?

By KYLE PATTERSON

Essendon Croatia, which is attempting to become only the third club to retain a Victorian State League championship, may sign Ivan Grujicic of Canberra City and Bruno Cagalj of Sydney Croatia.

Grujicic and Cagalj, both highly rated players, are to be unhappy with their clubs because of irregular appearances in the first teams.

Both have indicated they would like to join Essendon if they didn't remain with their present clubs.

Grujicic is a defender, forward, played for Essendon Croatia in 1976 and was an idol of the club's fans.

The ageing star is all-time top goalscorer for Essendon City.

Cagalj was linked with Marconi earlier this season, but the proposed transfer fell through. Since Cagalj has been on the outer with Marconi, he is suspended.

Clearly, the acquisition of the two Croatian stars would please Essendon's supporters.

With Grujicic and Cagalj, Croatia would be ready for the challenges of Frankston City and Preston Makedonia for the State League championships.

The team can't wait for the Victorian State League title, it will be the Victorian Soccer Federation Appeals Board.

Desiree, featuring Sunshine comfortably, could do a score as good as possible.

MONEY MAGIC

with Michael Morley

The current form indicates that score draws will be plentiful this week. With the exception of Queensland Division One and Two, there should be drawn matches in all the other leagues.

For a start, Victoria's First Division could provide us with two score draws in the matches at Melbourne and Ringwood. The only other game in the same league that's on the Pools list is the match at Springvale. Springvale is not scoring a lot of goals, but it should be able to beat the lowly Ardeer.

Victorian Division Two could provide a further two drawn matches in the games at Knox City and Richmond. Another match in this league that looks sure to be close is Kelviro Fitzroy, but I give a slight preference for the away team.

In the other Victorian leagues there could be more score draws in Division Three in the matches at Broadmeadows, Etham, and Prahran are possibilities while in the Fourth Division I fancy the games at Clayton and Monash to end all square.

In the west Australian State League, the games at East Fremantle and Gosnells look likely to be close. The matches at Melville and Rockingham in Division Two appear to be close encounters, and in the W.A. Division

Three, I consider the games at Belmont and Grayside to be evenly balanced.

Five of the ten matches on the list from South Australian leagues appear to favor the visiting teams, but in Division One I'm taking Beograd to hold Para Hills, and in Division Two we may see Adelaide City against Windsor fight out a score draw.

Of the five games in Queensland's Division One, there could easily be five results. Most of the matches could end in a home win. As nearly all the leaders are on their own grounds it is reasonable to assume that they will collect the points. It seems to be the same pattern with the two games in Division Two.

Newmarket should be able to make a successful trip to Salisbury, and although the game between Rover and Pine Rover is a battle of two lowly teams, I must give the vote to the home side.

While I wouldn't recommend any of the games in the Queensland divisions as score draws, I would suggest that you discard all these matches from your selections. Remember that sometimes it's the odd surprise result that can prove so valuable when playing the Pools.

This week I'm using my 17 selections in a planned entry and the match numbers with my choice of teams are:

7. Richmond, 11. Broadmeadows, 12. Eltham, 15. Prahran, 17. Clayton, 19. Monash, 23. E. Fremantle, 24. Gornal, 29. Melville, 32. Rockingham, 33. Belmont, 35. Grayside, 38. Beograd, 44. Adelaide City.

If you would like to try this plan I have left a blank line in the diagram for your selections. It will involve taking three entries of system 12 and at $1.50 each the investment is $4.50.

Choose your 17 matches and then reading from left to right put your best two selections in the first two spaces of the diagram. It doesn't matter in what order you place your remaining 15 matches. When you have marked all your selections on the blank line, use the corresponding X's as set out in the diagram as you transfer your numbers on to the entry forms.

With eight score draws in any one of the three system entries a first dividend would be assured.

If your best two selections are score draws and you have a further eight score draws falling anywhere among your other 15 selections a first dividend would also be guaranteed.

Until next week, good luck and good punting.

— MICHAEL MORLEY

In the 10th minute Kevin Vincent Tagliari scored his second goal to seal Mel's win.

Midvale Park VRI beat Lyngate 3-1.

They remained on top all day, playing together as a team and capitalising on all chances offered. The win was largely due to the excellent play of captain of William Alexander's hat-trick.

Moorabbin and ANZ Bank played a hard fought draw. Duncan Cimichini scored for them after Leon Zakkos equalised for ZANZ 15 minute into the second half. Otherwise it was a day on which both defences proved to be strong.

But the equalising goal did not come until the final 10 minutes, when Box Hill scored a goal in the 80th minute.

Hilman had good chances to score in both halves. In the first half, Scott Patterson fired two strong shots at goal, but keeper Dimopoulos saved both.

However, after half time Kelior didn't rise to the same heights.

Box Hill was down in attacking strength. Ray Taylor is injured and Mick Valentine unavailable.

Later in the game, Donald Brownlie came on as a substitute. It was Brownlie's first appearance for Box Hill since he played in the Second Division championship-winning team in 1975.
